Architecture in Schools: Secondary 2011

Awards

Welcome!

Welcome to the Architecture in Schools: Secondary Awards 2011. The Architecture in Schools: programme has been running for over ten years successfully enabling students and teachers to investigate, question and be inspired by exemplary architectural design.

The programme

The programme's aim is to enable young people to explore, 'unpack' and be part of London's exciting architecture, visiting inspirational buildings, working directly with design professionals and investigating key design issues through working to a project brief. This year students were set the challenge to 'design a 21st century community hub'. Adopting the role of 'architectives', students engage in multi-sensory activities to unlock insights into architectural design, developed collaboratively by the Open-City Education team, participating building professionals and teachers.

The competition

There was an overwhelming response to this year's competition, receiving 150 entries from schools across London. The specialist judging panel were highly impressed with the standard of work submitted. Many thanks to this year's judges: Rosie Parnell, Senior Lecturer in Architectural Design, Sheffield University, Michelle Dawson, Community Manager at Hammersons, Linda Foster, Library Area Manager, Southwark Council.

Acknowledgements

A special thank you to all the building representatives who kindly hosted architecture explorations, the building professionals and architecture students who volunteered their time to inspire and guide students, and the teachers who took the project on with fantastic enthusiasm, dedication and creativity.
